NEVADA NEEDS PUBLICITY

FIFTY thousand tourists are expected on the Pacific coast this year. So the railroads say and they are the best judges of what to expect in the way of business. In the meantime while we are waiting for the opening of the season it may not be unwise to inquire what Nevada is doing to advertise her boundless resources. As a famous Nevada writer once commented, "Nevada is known to more travelers than any other state in the union and is less known than any other state." The explanation is not that the state is so remote from the coast, but that the average man who traverses the state is going from coast to coast, knows he is going through what has been known as the sagebrush state, but beyond that he has no means of acquiring further information and the authorities, who are supposed to represent the taxpayers, are willing that nothing be given out that will rebound to the credit of the state. In the course of the twenty-six hours that it takes to cross Nevada, from the Utah line to the foothills where California begins, not a scrap of official information is tendered the traveler and the club cars are devoid of any reading matter that would convey the slightest information about the mineral or agricultural development of the country that betwixt monotonous for the reason that the tourist has nothing to arouse his interest in the landscape. Historical points on the old Overland trail are passed in a silence that is oppressively suggestive of the giant ostrich trying to conceal itself by hiding its head in the sands of the desert. Lord knows this state is big enough and its history is glorious enough to warrant kind and generous mention but there is no speaker or belly-boo to inform the curious what is going on in the big top, not to say anything about the sidewalks. Nevada made the third greatest percentage of gain in population last year, yet it is doubtful if a single child in the Tonopah high school is aware of that fact. Nevada is rapidly becoming the great wheat state of the union, but the governor sets up on a rostrum and tells the world that there is no room for grain growers in Nevada. There is an intangible beauty about Nevada scenery that only one artist has tried to encompass and that is a Tonopah man whose name is unknown to more than a few scores of his fellow citizens.

What is there about this state that makes most people descant on its good qualities in whispers as though they were afraid or ashamed to be heard? Is it a sacrifice to boast our land about the commonwealth that is making greater strides to the front than almost any other state in the union? Therefore, why speak in awed tones and suppressed voices? There is no crime to brag about the state that gives you a livelihood or, perhaps, the state that gave you birth and there is no excuse or apology for not coming right out in meeting and letting the stranger know that Nevada is the first in silver, one of the leaders in gold, second in tungsten, although the first shipment was made less than four months ago, a big producer of copper, lead, zinc and quicksilver and that but one other state in the union yields as bountiful a potato crop as does Nevada.

Some of these things should be hammered into the heads of the rising generation that the young people growing up in the public schools should be endowed with a loftier and more material patriotism than they manifest now when confronted by the ardent enthusiastic boosters of other states.

It was Charles Dana who remarked once at a banquet of the great editors of New York: "Let me write the headlines; I don't care who writes the editorials." So it is with the publication of school books. None of them attempts to do justice to Nevada as the writers in some far eastern state have no personal knowledge of the subject he is entrusted with. The School Book Trust is largely responsible for the deplorable ignorance existing with reference to the resources of this state and it would not be asking too much to insist that all books for the schools of Nevada be edited by some competent Nevada authority before they are adopted for use in the public schools.

Wyoming is coming back with some of the old style ginger that made the name of the Hole in the Wall outlaws a terror for the operating departments of every railroad in the west. The McCarthy boys never were satisfied with petty larceny jobs but the law finally got them behind the bars. Since that memorable event Wyoming has been reasonably safe for travelers.

Germany is willing to sell the United States 15,000 tons of dye-stuffs to throttle an infant industry that is struggling to keep its head above water until the return of a Republican administration with a protective tariff. It would be natural that the Wilson free traders, should exert every effort to land this shipment.

Chehalis, Washington, is so excited over the discovery of quicksilver that a shotgun guard has been established to protect cinnabar claims. In the meantime all is serene in and around Mina where the "Quick" is flowing from half a dozen retorts.

Poor old Uncle Sam has had a hard time of it dealing with such rascals as those finding shelter in the German consulates and the double dyed hypocrites of Mexico who protested friendship all the while they were aching for a chance to cut the throat of their best friend.

The San Francisco Call asserts that "The best fishing in California is off San Francisco." That is the belief of the Nevada suckers who went down to the bay last summer to be hooked.

It is not remarkable that it remained for a Chicago court to find that Lord Bacon was the author of the writings accredited to Bill Shakespeare. A sort of a boost for Chicago's chief product?

Recruiting officers report plenty of fighting men in the country, but few men willing to enlist to mow lawns or clean garbage cans as part of their garrison duties.

Germany is very kind, the sort of benevolence that crops out when you go to a bank to borrow when you cannot show up the right kind of collateral.

Von Bernstorff protests too much and Uncle Sam may prefer to send him home.

DELIGHTING TURKS WITH GERMAN OPERA

MUSIC NOT OVERLOOKED IN THE INVASION OF CONSTANTINOPLE

(By Associated Press.)

BERLIN, Apr. 24. — Berlin papers devote considerable space to the fact that Herr Erik Schwede, a widely known German opera singer is in Constantinople, where he has been delighting the Turks with some of the best known German compositions. Besides filling the opera house in Stamboul with crowds devoted to Leoncavallo and Mascagni he has appeared before the Sultan singing the Love Song from Wagner's Walkure and several of Schumann's masterpieces.

NOVEL FEATURES IN A FUTURIST DRAMA

ONE DOG AND A PAIR OF LEGS ONLY ACTORS SEEN ON THE STAGE

ROME, Apr. 24.—The Italian futurist dramatists have launched a "Synthetic Theater" here as a means of raising money for war charities. Here they produce fourteen dramas of "concentrated impressionism," shown of conventional technique. Most of the plays are one act curtain raisers. The most popular playlet has no human actors, but only a dog. In another, only the legs of the players appear behind the half-raised curtain.

PAUL BEVERT, of the Verdi Lumber company, went out this morning to take in Goldville and points on the narrow gauge line in Inyo county.
